How to deal with a referee How to deal with a referee? We all have at some point to deal with an referee. The referee will have only one thing in mind: keeping you from winning. And that's a tough job. But, you have to play by the rules. How to avoid being fooled by a ref: 1. You have to be professional. Don't badmouth the ref, don't talk back, don't digress. Let him speak and you make up your mind. 2. You must try to be equal to the ref, and even better. You must make him feel superior. You must be just as good, even better than him. To check if your opponent is holding back, you have to know how to recognize it. 3. You must understand that there are two systems at work. One is the specific technical system used by the referee. For example, if you are playing snooker, you have to follow and use the actual playing rules of the game: the table, the balls, the game and so on. The technical system used by the referee is the basis of the rules of the game.

4. The rules of the game, the system used by the referee, are a blueprint for how things should be played. They are generally better or worse. You can't use the system and expect to win. That's a bit like expecting to score a goal on a soccer field while knowing that the rules of that game are made by a man who is under strict orders not to allow you to score. How to know if a ref is holding back: There are two different systems at work in the game: the referee system and the game system. The referee plays a particular role in the game. Because he is the only one who can stop the game, he will have his own set of rules to use, the technical rules. The specific technical rules are used when he wants to make sure that you don't pass balls out of play, that you don't hit the ball in any other way than the specified way (i.e. you won't hit it with the arm, you won't use the cue stick, you won't hit it with the cue stick) etc. The second system, the rules used by the referee, are the blueprints. They are much more general: the rules for a game are designed so that everyone who plays the game will be able to understand them, everyone will be able to win
