Either way, there was a loud noise coming from the ground. Possibly the field could not get a reading on how serious it was and they played it safe, for fear of taking flight school students on a death defying weekend. I don't think there was much danger other than possibly of losing some runs which is common at open week. The strong winds, especially at break time and lunch, were very troublesome, the pilots working hard, even opening a door to get into a restroom during the day.
